Report Statement

This is the first sustainability report about the Chinese Beverage Industry issued by China Beverage Industry Association.

International Organization for Standardization (ISO) refers to social responsibility of an organization as the responsible behavior of an organization's impacts on the society and environment, which should be in line with requirement on social benefits and sustainable development.

Chinese industries and companies should not only be required by international standards to carry out a social responsibility, but also incorporate the unique characteristics of our country. Companies implementing social responsibilities can be categorized into three levels of commitment; i.e. showing obedience to laws and regulations, referring to a responsibility that must be taken; showing full reflection of corporate values, referring to a responsibility that should be taken, and noble chase for ethics and morals, referring to a responsibility that could be taken. This report is compiled according to these three aspects and makes an extra distinction between Industry illustrations and Company illustrations.

The report also discusses the social responsibility practices of some of the companies in the Chinese beverage industry. The report refers to a total number of 150 companies.

The selection of 12 companies discussed in the part About the Company has previously been awarded with the title "2009 CSR Best Practice Enterprise of the Chinese Beverage Industry". The report highlights the results of the social responsibility shown by these companies in the areas "Company and Society", "Company and Environment" and "Company and Employees".

The Chinese Beverage Industry report is compiled based on information available from the years 2008 and 2009. In order to provide a comprehensive evaluation of the impact of the beverage industry, some information from earlier years and the year 2010 is also included in this report. We view this report as the first step described in the Sustainability Reporting Guidelines as issued by Global Reporting Initiative (GRI). We feel committed to our industry responsibility to continuously improve our monitoring and reporting capacity.
